[L. S.] Seal of the Foreign Office, at Honolulu, this ninth day of May, 1857.

R. C. WYLLIE.

[From the London Eve. Mail.]

As we cannot go into the principles of public expenditure as largely as we should wish, we will only add one example to show what the representatives of an industrious and thrifty people can do, with hardly a thought about the matter, and without any scruple as to the proper line between public and private expenditure. The House of Commons has recently sanctioned a survey for Scotland on the scale of 5 feet a mile, and it is now being carried on with contour lines every 25 yards. It will give every Scotch proprietor, at the public expense, a better map of his 1,000 or 2,000 acres of moor than is possessed by any English gentleman who has not gone to great expense for such a purpose. It will faithfully record an infinite variety of crags, depressions, gulleys, water-channels, scrubs, tufts, &c., only visited by wild game, and an occasional sportsman in pursuit of them. A great number of the objects to be recorded, such as huts, fences, and roads, are in the process of destruction, and will soon only survive on the map. It will be more than a third of a mile long, and will cover about 40 acres. Of course, it will suspend all private surveying in Scotland. One proprietor, by the moderate payment of 1,500*l.*, has obtained an immediate application of the act to his own estate, so barren and thinly peopled as to make a survey almost ridiculous; and it is estimated that the survey of this estate alone will cost the public 35,000*l.* The survey of all Scotland will not be completed in less than thirty years, and will cost more than a million. Over thousands of acres it will cost more than the value of the land. To the public at large, it will be perfectly useless; it cannot be comprehended in any portfolio or book; and, even supposing the tourist to obtain a few sheets, he would find that at the ordinary rate of posting, he passed in half an hour out of one sheet into another. The map made can never be homogeneous; its several portions will not be contemporary; one portion will represent the country as it is in 1857, and another as it will be in 1880. It will contain villages, homesteads, paths, and other features that no longer exist, and will give in their native savageness, districts which before the completion of the map will be covered with human habitations. We give this as an example of what the British House of Commons did the other day, and may do again any day. It is never safe from financial escapades of the most costly character, and the more it saves by pinching and paring and cutting down salaries already beggarly enough, the more ready is it at any hour to fling away the ten years candle ends and cheese parings into some such abyss as this survey of Scotland.

Jack Ashore.

While the seamen of the Pearl were on shore last Wednesday, enjoying that relaxation from ship discipline which the sailor so appreciates, we were not a little amused at seeing them make an onslaught on a Chinaman's cake stand, and after "carrying in gallant style" the entire stock of questionable delicacies, the spokesman of the party coolly remarked, "John, we are now at war with your nation, d'y'e see. We have made a fair prize of you, and when peace is declared, we'll settle." Our Chinese friend seemed to think discretion was the better part of valor, though like the Irishman's parrot, he no doubt kept up a d—l of a thinking. In justice to Jack we will say that he returned and paid for the cakes. We have often heard tell of "dead marines," but never saw the thing so nearly exemplified as one day this week, when the "liberty men" of the man-of-war bought a new coffin from a carpenter's shop, in which they deposited the "lobsters" who had taken refreshments until they were overtaken, and had to be undertaken to the boat.

James Bell.

The seaman who was the unfortunate cause of the death of Peter Lanehan, on board the whale-ship Adeline last month, is now in confinement in the Fort, and will be sent to San Francisco in the Yankee for trial, together with the witnesses in the case.
